Evaluation of a single-center experience with the everolimus-eluting bioresorbable vascular scaffold in the treatment of coronary artery disease. The aim of this study was to evaluate the safety and efficacy of the everolimus-eluting bioresorbable vascular scaffold (EES) in a routine clinical practice setting. There is an increasing number of alternative treatment strategies and devices for coronary artery disease. The results of a sub-study of the EXAMINATION trial were recently published, demonstrating the safety and efficacy of this device in routine clinical practice. This study was conducted in our center, using EES as an alternative to conventional treatment in a heterogenous group of patients. From November 2012 to April 2013, 42 consecutive patients (23 men and 19 women) were implanted with EES in various lesions. The indication for the procedure was successful percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) of noncomplex lesions. Procedural success was defined as successful scaffold implantation and restoration of coronary flow in the infarct-related artery. The mean age of the patients was 66.3 ± 9.4 years. The ST-segment-elevation myocardial infarction rate was 55.5
